FISHING

The Tennessee Valley Authority built Kentucky Dam at Gilbertsville, Ky., impounding the Tennessee River in 1945. Kentucky Lake grew from that span, backing up more than 180 miles south, far into Tennessee. It's a huge water hole with almost 50,000 acres of surface in just Kentucky's portion of the impoundment. With major embayments, feeder creeks and coves lining both flanks of the reservoir, the shoreline is just immense.

While a majority of Kentucky Lake black bass are large-mouth, there's also a wrist-wrenching population of small-mouth bass, and depending on where and how anglers fish, smallmouth can now represent a fair segment of the black bass catch. Five-pound and larger small-mouth aren't strangers.

Kentucky Lake's earlier reputation, however, was built on crappie. Unbelievable catches of crappie made the Tennessee River impoundment legendary way back when, and it's still a crappie angler's mecca all these years later. Biologists say crappie numbers are healthy but cyclic, with ups and downs every few year.

If you are looking for pan fryers, we have that as well. The bluegill and redears nowadays produce catches of quality fish in sumptuous quantities, especially during spring and early summer spawning times. Other warm weather fishing mainstays are white bass and their slightly smaller cousins, yellow bass. These predators – "stripes" to the local anglers can be caught most of the year but really shine when summer's heat is on.

If bigger is always better, however, and fishing for skillet or deep fryer fodder is a primary concern, you might want to consider Kentucky Lake's catfish: channel cats, flat-head and the plentiful and often ponderous blue catfish.

Kentucky Lake is a giant lake with plenty of relative giant fish of all sizes from saucer-sized bluegill, to trophy bass to catfish as long as your leg. What species do you want to chase next?

HUNTING

Take a walk on the wild side of the Kentucky Lake area for some memory-making hunting adventures. The woodlands, waters, fields and sloughs of the region keep pulling back sportsmen every season for pursuits of game, large and small, furred and feathered. A headliner for many hunters is the white-tailed deer. Kentucky's long-running archery season, crossbow hunting, muzzle-loader and modern rifle seasons provide ample opportunities to search out that wall-hanger and the freezer-filling venison the deer hunter seeks.

Public land is often critical to opportunity, and the Kentucky Lake area has ample opportunities. The U.S. Forest Service-managed Land Between the Lakes National Recreation Area is an enormous wooded peninsula sandwiched between Kentucky Lake & Lake Barkley. The big woods area has long been a favorite for visiting deer hunters who take advantage of tremendous elbowroom, bonus deer permits, quota gun hunts and freewheeling archery hunting opportunities.

Another kind of habitat is Clark's River National Wildlife Refuge, which centers around the bottomland hardwood corridor of Clark's River both upstream and downstream from its headquarters in Benton. It offers thousands of acres where enterprising hunters can probe the bottomlands for boomer bucks in deer season.

Turkeys rival deer when it comes to stirring hunter passions, and the Kentucky Lake area is packed with the big birds. The rites of spring mean turkey gobbler hunting mobilizing a camouflage-clad legion in pursuit of old Tom. Land Between the Lakes NRA hosts quota turkey hunting as well as non-quota, and open hunting opportunities each spring gobbler season. Clark's River NWR also hosts a great deal of turkey hunting under statewide season regulation.

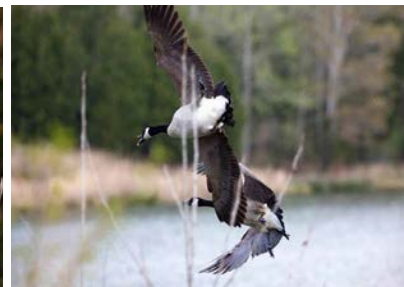

Water-fowl is another driving force for sportsmen. Kentucky Lake can be a chilly season hotbed for waterfowl action when Mississippi Flyway migrators spin off for some big water rest stops. The big reservoir attracts a mixture of puddle ducks, some divers, and a smattering of Canadian geese add some extra big bird zest at Kentucky Lake - The South's Great Lake. Free lance hunting from boat and shoreline blinds can be rewarding throughout the season. Kentucky Lake hunting can get a jolt of added duck movement during serious winter cold when bottomland waters freeze over and birds seek out the open water of the reservoir.

The Canal Loop Trail in LBL is perfect for mountain bikers. Featuring a 14.2-mile trail system that includes four connector trails which offer a variety of rides. The trail can be accessed from either the North Welcome Station Trail-head or the Kentucky Lake Drive Trail Access. It has an easy to moderate rating and a 120-foot change in elevation.

The Northern Section of the North-South Trail in LBL, which is a 31-mile section, is open to mountain biking and connects the North Welcome Station with the Golden Pond Visitors Center. The point-to-point trail traverses ridge tops, bottom-lands and the shores of Kentucky Lake. Visitors can use this trail in conjunction with LBL's legal roads to make a series of shorter loops. Other opportunities include connecting to the Canal Loop Trail for a total of 45 miles.

Continue southward and the North-South Trail in LBL leads on for a full 59-mile trail spans the entire length of the recreation area. Terrain ranges from rugged, hilly areas in the north to easier, less strenuous work in the south. You can access sections of this trail from points along a variety of Forest Service roads and facilities throughout Land Between The Lakes.

Central Hardwoods Scenic Trail is a new east-west trail connecting Kentucky Lake to Lake Barkley and generally parallels US 68. It is a family-friendly trail with smooth surfaces, gentle grades and is about 11 miles long. The eastern 2.5 mile portion is paved and offers great views of Lake Barkley. The 8.5-mile west portion is compacted stone.

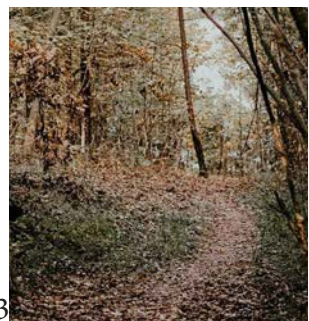

Most campgrounds in Land Between The Lakes have biking trails for those who are staying at the campgrounds. For more information about these campgrounds in LBL, visit our Land Between The Lakes Campgrounds section.

GOLF

Although viewing birds in LBL and exploring the waters of Kentucky Lake are great ways to spend your outdoor vacation, sometimes you just have the need to make your own "birdies" and avoid the water. With this in mind, the Kentucky Lake area has several golf courses to let you seek out "birdies" and "eagles", and try to avoid the wet stuff. From challenging 18-hole designs all the way to Executive courses for a quick afternoon 9, our courses will appeal to every skill level. And with our low prices, you can hit more greens while saving some "green".
